Public Improvisations

The first public performance, conducted in the Central House of Art Workers in July 1983, was probably the crucial test for the very idea of collective improvisation. Would people be indired ed before, to complete the text within an hour, and to read it aloud to a large audience? and arrestroly it was "a wealth" -- a concept that conseconded perhapty to the very structure of collective improvisation, in which many individual approaches had to be interviowen, like flowers thoughts and all of a sudden we felt les we confessed later) something in the very structure of this improvisational space that impolarlius to write and think in the presence of others. This colonger were obtaind to pronounce common thinks in order to establish social contact with the others but could be justified and recognized in being ourselves, different from one another commonness, and from this moment on we were liberated to exclose the most eccentric and ideaynastic modes of interpretation. Usually in social communication the topic is never fixed in time of relaxation into a more agiern occupation, a sort of scholarly dispute or conference panel To follow the standards of politeness: people are ready to sacrifice their own interests, and the foog loosely wanders from the weather to shopping, from aports to politics, revolving abound the "zero" point of neutrality and indifference. At improvisational sessions, as soon as the topic is lective improvisation never firms into a conference discussion because it displays individual generated a state of inspiration that, as is known from the time of the Muses, comes as "othersonfled by the prisonce of others at the table, an interpersonal rather than a super-personal mode of transcendence

On the one hand, high concepts were rancely estranged and reduced to the trival on the other hand, the trivial object was elevated to the rank of "eternal ideas." This "obuble-think," the embyelence of excelliding and despending interpretations is one of the most encyable aspects of interdisciplinary communication. We colled ourselves "metaphysical soldiers," implying that the "ganerals" of mataphysics like Kint or Head profer to concentrate on the most general services of being and to observe if from the highest, "Olympian" perspectives as belitting commanders in drief, while we, rank and file, are thrown into the thickness of the ordinary and are responsible for the merephysical explanation of A general corrospt, on a communicative plane presupposes the ascension of venous minds to a

On the contrary, ordinary things are ordinary precisely because ideas that could resonate with the over object, but none of these ideas could encompass that object completely. Therefore, difference in perspectives was patified by the opeque nature of the of heroic despair and determination, whereas the same nat out on the grass would signify an dylic state of lesure where the top and the bottom are brought to the same level. All spatial to the level of the feet. These were only two of the numerous ideas that haiped us to explain "the abinnal class or a disciplinary term. No concept could be completely adequate to this ordinary object, rather its comprehension demanded the deployment of newer and newer concepts
